Objective of the Seminar

The national seminar on "Sustainable Development and CSR: The Role and Opportunities for Tribal Communities," delves into the crucial nexus between sustainability, corporate social responsibility (CSR), and the empowerment of India's tribal populations. With their rich cultural heritage and deep understanding of living in harmony with nature, tribal communities, constituting 8.6% of India's population, possess immense potential as partners in sustainable development. This seminar aims to showcase the invaluable contributions of tribal communities in areas such as resource management, biodiversity conservation, and climate resilience. By fostering partnerships between responsible CSR initiatives and these communities, the goal is to co-create sustainable livelihoods, economic empowerment, and cultural preservation.

Sub-themes will explore harnessing indigenous wisdom for sustainable livelihoods, designing empowering CSR models, and identifying opportunities for collaboration among government, corporations, and NGOs in tribal regions. Through keynote addresses, discussions, research presentations, and interactive workshops, participants will explore best practices, advocate for policy changes, and develop concrete action plans.

By bringing together diverse stakeholders, including government officials, corporate leaders, academics, and tribal representatives, the seminar seeks to raise awareness of the unique challenges faced by these communities. Insightful discussions and collaborative brainstorming will contribute to formulating recommendations and action points for policymakers, stakeholders, and community leaders, ultimately paving the way for tribal communities to become active participants in India's journey towards inclusive and sustainable development.
